Tissue paper is the foundation of every kind of fireworks. Layer after layer is wrapped about the steel or wooden mould or frame on which the rocket candle, or shell is made, until the surface is just the right thickness. That gives the cracker the great strength. When the case is once made, the workers pack in the powder filled stars or balls. If it be a candle or rocket they are filling, they drop the materials in by hand and then apply hydraulic pressure to force them down firmly and tightly so that a strong force is needed to eject them.

The big radio or bomb shells are delicate things to make. The case is usually pear shaped and varies in thickness, the larger ones bevaries in thickness, the larger ones being made of tissue paper to the thickness of nearly an inch. The inside is hollow and there are carefully packed the powder and the materials that are to produce the lights, stars and balls. The repeating bomb consists of several smaller bombs placed one within the other, so that as one explodes the other is ignited and explodes shortly after. The outer case of the shell is entirely destroyed by the first hag explosion. destroyed by the first big explosion

The men who work in the firework factory are all skilled and experienced. They understand to a nicety the art of combining colors. But the most in-They understand to a nicety the art of combining colors. But the most important man in this respect is the chemist. He originates all the various shades and tints. It is said that he often works as long as three ments just to secure a special tint or more perfect color. It is also said that he can secure almost every tint with his chemicals. Another man of much importance in the factory is the artist. He designs all the exhibition pieces. The carpenter starts them by building a frame of wood in squares of about the dimensions of an inch. The artist then draws the pictures necording to the scale laid out. The object to be attained is to get the greatest effect with the fewest lines. He also marks where the pins are to be laid for the colors and where the colors are to be applied. The jucture is then passed to the foreman of the factory, who covers it with strips of rattan. Puns are then stock where the artist has indicated, the color gerbes applied, and finally the quick match ignites and quickly spreads over the lines of the picture, sending it into a glow of flame. It is possible to produce in this way any picture made of simple lines.

Nobody has anything against the legi nate fireworks business. The use of eworks in celebration of such days this is appropriate and will continue as this is appropriate and will continue. But there will come a time when fireworks will not be entrusted to children, when only experienced men will be permitted to handle them, and when the dangerous ones are all discarded for the harmless and more beautiful "set pices" of the kind which awe the children and thrill even the oldest heart (Copyright, 1908, by Frederic J.
